Successful Predictions: August 20, 2001 I predicted on these pages a 911 tragedy to occur within 30 days. Previously I predicted the exact day the bombing would stop in Serbia several weeks in advance. Unfortunately, the New World Order types also time events to coincide with what disasters astrologers suggest will happen. Currently, my financial predictions on radio are also accurate in calling for giant business collapse.

Frank Stronach's Magna Offers Canadian Electric Car

It is expected that Harper will deny a request to put Canada into world leadership by blocking a loan to create a start-up electric car. Frank Stronach at Magna has been working on an electric car for three years. Ford's Focus vehicle will work with Stronach. Stronach has been a world leader with innovative car parts manufacturing that has kept price down from General Motors' inefficient, poorly planned and designed products. GM CEO Wagoner was forced to resign because of his institutionalized ineptitude over the years. Morons in middle management insisted on a system of nepotism and good-old-boys club to design poorly working seat belts, etc. cars with no design leadership anywhere. The good-old-boys club has finally given up the ghost because their arrogance of when they would not bother to answer the showroom phone meant buyers had to chase them. Japanese and German import car showrooms did have staff to cater to the public.

Up to today, 17 unionists have been killed this year. That shows that the situation has not improved, it has worsened.

Pruner: Opponents of the bill have noted that the government is saying there is a guarantee of labour rights in this bill, but that in the way the bill is written there is an imbalance between the rights given to investors, for example foreign companies and their power and power given to people, to unions and workers under the free trade agreement. Can you comment on that imbalance?

Hoyos: Yes, there is a very big imbalance in terms mainly of the dispute resolution mechanisms. There are dispute resolution mechanisms that have been foreseen for firms, for large firms that can submit their claims even against the state while workers don't have any dispute resolution mechanisms foreseen for them in the agreement. So, there are many guarantees for the large companies and no guarantees whatsoever for the workers.

Pruner: Now this creates a special problem particularly in Colombia where I understand there are 4 million people who have been displaced internally, which, I believe, makes Colombia the second worst area for displaced persons after Sudan, so it seems to me that if you give corporations powers to sue the state but you don't give workers and trade unions the opportunity to similar powers than this internal displacement will only be exacerbated. Is that true?

Hoyos: Yes, it's true. Colombia the second country in terms of internally displaced population and the country with the largest amount of unionists being killed. I think that the FTA would increase displacement because Colombia is an underdeveloped country, so what the companies come to our country to do is to take our primary resources and this affects the Afro-Colombian and the indigenous people's populations. We have already had the cases of large multinationals, such as Chiquita Brands, which have paid the paramilitary to kill peasants and other inhabitants in the area where they are working, and they see themselves, their families see themselves forced to move to other places and become displaced.

Pruner: Can you comment on the Uribe regime and its ties to the paramilitary organizations and the chilling effect of recent government actions on democracy and on efforts to organize unions etc?

Hoyos: Yes, our democracy is actually being weakened. We no longer have the social rule of law that we had before. Our president is trying to run for president for the third time and this would mean that this would become a dictatorship. We have worked very hard so as to bring this process to a halt, but it has been very difficult. We, the unionists, as well as many other defenders are prosecuted and stigmatized. The President himself has come out publicly and has said that we the unionists are terrorists [as is] anyone who tries to defend human rights. So all of these rights that make a part of this political constitution of our own charter of rights no longer are being respected. Thirty percent of our parliamentarians are being investigated, they have been accused of belonging to the paramilitary or controlling the paramilitary, and we also have the director of the National Security Department, Jorge Novera, who has also been accused of having strong links with the paramilitary.

Pruner: I note that George Bush, the former President of the United States was very keen on this free trade agreement, and that the current president,

President Obama and his administration are taking much more of a go-slow approach and would like to see more improvements in human rights before entering into an agreement. Do you think there is a message for Canada in that new approach by the Obama administration?

Hoyos: Yes, of course, I think that that's a very strong message which we should actually take into consideration very seriously I would warn anyone trying to deal with Colombia to be very careful when dealing with Colombia because at the very heart of these negotiations are the lives of Colombians which are at stake. And the message that I would like to bring to all Canadians is that they should look deeper into this agreement and the consequences that it may have before they go ahead and approve it because I think the human rights situation in Colombia is truly alarming today.
